Author Kesey bitter over death of son

By A Vogel

"The notion of putting protect­ on around people must extend beyond soldiers, beyond foreign governments," said author Ken Kesey in a press conference yesterday at Eastern's Higher Education Center in downtown Spokane.
Kesey, author of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," and "Sometimes A Great Notion," said he was going to become more politically active to ensure that more stringent safety practices are upheld in transporting people aboard buses and vans.
Kesey, whose son died recently as a member of the University of Oregon wrestling team traveling from Pendleton to Pullman when the team's van plunged over a 180-foot cliff, said, "As time passed, I have run it through my mind of what to do about it (the accident).
"I watched us lobbing shells into Lebanon, and the newscaster couldn't say whether the marines were hitting Druse militiamen or Christians. When I thought of the expense of our being in Lebanon, I began to think, why wasn't my son defended? If you don't defend what's at home, then why defend what's overseas?"
Kesey also said he "may sue PAC-10, the NCAA, or the federal government" by push for more safety devices aboard vehicles, and safer practices for maintaining roads.
"They just don't have the searches, or CB's, or rescue kits around these buses like they should have,"

Kesey again commented on the amount of money spent by the United States in foreign countries, saying, "It's just bringing some of this money back into this country, where it counts."
Kesey placed no blame on the driver of the van his son was killed in or the coach of the U of O wrestling team, adding that "he did everything he could do, and he's going through hell."

Kesey, only briefly mentioning his son, Joel, by name, said he had received over 1,200 letters from parents who had lost kids, athletic programs who had near escapes, and a number of other concerned parents.
Kesey noted that the parents of one of the wrestlers killed had "started protests against the manufacturer of the van because the side door of the van wouldn't close properly.
"I questioned about his sudden urge to become politically active, Kesey said that "I'll be out there with those hippies when the white train comes through town," refer­ ing to the white train that allegedly carried nuclear warheads to the Binger submarine base in western Washington.

Industrial ed grad program axed by state

By Cal Fitzsimmons

Citing low enrollments and duplication of a program offered by Washington State University, the Institute for Business Educa­tion has cancelled Eastern Washington University's industrial education program of the master's of education degree.
EWW President George Frederickson said the move came as a surprise to him.
"We've known for months that this would happen," Frederickson said. "We had a gentlemen's agreement at the outset that we would give up this program in exchange for two baccalaureates and two masters in computer fields," Fredericksen said.

W. Dan Martin, chairman of the industrial education and technology program at Eastern, the cancellation did not come as a big surprise but was "very disappointing."

"I knew something was amiss when I heard our program was under review," Martin said.
Martin said the cancellation will not affect the undergraduate programs in industrial technology to which he is knowledgeable. He said what it will mean is the cancella­tion of some summer master's programs and perhaps worst of all the loss of a graduate fellow to aid in the instruction of some of the industrial courses.
"This started out as a monesaving effort by the Legislature but I don't think it will save any money," Martin said. "It is a real ly doing is combining two programs in the summer."
The industrial education program at Western Washington University was also eliminated and the program at Central Washington University voluntary­ ly suspended. This means EWW is the only public university left in the state offering the program.

Healthy babies are the goal

By Robert Siler

Even simple drugs such as aspirin and caffeine, taken impropriety by a woman during pregnancy, can cause birth defects, says Helen Westrum, a professor in the home economics department.

Getting that sort of information to the people who need it most is the object of two of Westrum's classes this quarter. Her Adult Education and Communication and Demonstration Techniques classes, working with the local March of Dimes, helped arrange for the University and the city of Spokane to declare March 5-9 Healthy Baby Week.

Westrum's classes split into groups to work on various aspects of the quarter-long project, she said.

Some members worked to arrange for a proclamation to be signed by the mayor of Spokane and President Frederickson. That proclamation was signed last Wednesday, with Spokane City Council member Vicki McNeil standing in for Mayor Jacques Chase, who was ill.

Other class members worked on preparing public service announcements, arranging for films to educate adults in the proper techniques needed to help assure that children will be healthy at birth, preparing posters and crossword puzzles with educational messages, and other related projects.

"Our goal is to educate men and women before they become parents about the responsibility they have to ensure the health of future generations," Westrum said. She added that this was the first time the March of Dimes had organized a Healthy Baby Week in this area.

Westrum said it appeared the project worked out very successfully; with students getting some practical experience in preparing public relations-type projects and contacting local media. Two of the Spokane-area television stations covered some of the week's activities, she said.

American Red Cross President Gina Hames said she was pleased with the faculty's decision. "We have those council members who voted on it, Hall said.

"We're going over the committees to see if student participation is necessary on all of them. With over 100 positions available, it is hard to keep track of all the students to see if they are attending meetings," she said.

However, she stated that this was the first time students have been involved in the council process.

Student members of the Academic Senate and committees have the right to vote on the issues again, announced Wayne Hall, president of the faculty organization. An amendment restoring those voting rights, which were lost when the faculty rewrote their constitution last June, was approved by over 90 percent of the faculty members who voted on it. Hall said.

John Spellman announced Friday the appointments of Holly Sonnendal of Spokane and Deborah Res of Richland to the EWU board of trustees.

"We're delighted by the selection," said Eastern President George Frederickson.

Film concert today part of this week's women's celebration

By Susan Walsdorf
Staff Writer

Eastern's Women's Center will celebrate Women's History Month with a free concert and film today in connection with Women's History Week, March 5-9.

The Women's Center has sponsored this occasion with an international exhibition of women's clothing, a slide presentation by EWU professor Henry York-Stinner, and the aforementioned film and concert. According to Margaret Craford, program assistant for the Women's Center, a women's forum will be held at Ferris High School in Spokane March 10. More information is available through the Women's Center.

"Usually when you have studied women, it was a writer or a poet. You didn't hear about the women of the Revolution," said Craford.

"This week's events will point out these women." Women's History Week buttons are on sale at the Center as well as t-shirts and sweatshirts.

"The only thing we are selling for a profit are the buttons which will fund the Women's Center Library Fund," said Craford. "Nobody makes a financial gain."

The free concert, featuring "We Three," is very informal as the women will sing without microphones and acapella, which means without piano accompaniment, said Craford. "The concert will be very warm and personal," said Craford.

Get your aid forms submitted

Financial aid students!
The good news: financial aid amounts for next year will remain about the same.
The bad news: if you haven't applied to note Eastern's information validation policy. Currently, the university validates information for Pell Grant applicants only - which is bound to change, Shackette said. "The year after next, we will be required to validate information submitted by no less than 20 percent of the financial aid applicants," she continued. That means that if you falsify information on your forms, you stand at least a one in five chance of getting nailed.

Faculty couple hurt in car crash

Two members of the EWU faculty were involved in a car accident four and one-half miles west of Cheney on Salnave Road Tuesday, Feb. 23.

William K. Katz, dean of Eastern's school of human learning and development, and his wife, Joan Katz, an academic counselor with the International Students Program, were on their way to the university at approximately 7:45 a.m. when an oncoming vehicle apparently lost its traction on freshly fallen snow, hitting the Katz' car and knocking it into a ditch.

"We were shaken up quite a bit," said Dean Katz. "But it wasn't as bad as it might have been. ... We consider ourselves fortunate." Mrs. Katz has a broken leg at the time of the accident.

The collision tore open the suture in her leg but didn't disrupt the setting, said Dean Katz.

The Katz' returned to school Friday, March 2; Mrs. Katz on crutches and Dean Katz in a wheelchair.

Suffering from torn ligaments, bruises and temporary paralysis in his legs, Dean Katz said he is on his way to recovery.

"It's slow going, uncomfortable and painful," Mrs. Katz said of their recuperation.

Goodbye, Chopper

Help The New K-89 say goodbye to Chopper Johnson Friday morning at 7:45, 8:10 and 8:30. Eastern's "eagle-eyed man in the sky" has been providing Cheney news reports all quarter from the K-89 copter, but is rumored to be moving for a "lucrative position in Detroit," according to sources at the campus station. Scheduled co-pilots on Chopper's last show are Ronald Reagan, Rocky Balboa, and the ever popular Sgt. McGruff, crime dog.

Rooms in Streeter Hall were without power for a while Friday afternoon because someone turned off 23 switches in a electrical panel, police said.

Evelyn K. Carlson, 20, of Pearce Hall was arresed by University Police Feb. 29 in connection with a bomb threat against Kingston Hall reported Feb. 17. She was booked at Spokane County Jail and released on her own recognizance, police said.

University Police are investigating an apparent false fire alarm pulled at Streeter Hall Friday night.

A wallet containing credit cards and $40 was reported stolen from a Streeter Hall dorm room Saturday. It was apparently taken sometime between 9 p.m. Friday and noon Saturday, police said.

An unidentified male reportedly ripped a sign off a wall on the second floor of Drexler Hall Saturday, police said.

Pearce Hall Director Paul Stevens reported that someone pulled the fire alarm near one of the dorm's service doors just after midnight Saturday. Residents were evacuated, but no fire was found.

University Police said "five to seven" persons apparently from Washington State University were escorted from Pearce Hall Saturday night. They were said to have been "causing problems" and were told not to return.

Trustee nominations

Why the wait?

Finally.

Monday of this week brought an announcement from Olympia that Governor John Spellman had nominated two people to fill the vacancies on Eastern's Board of Trustees. The two possible trustees are Holly Sonneland of Spokane and Deborah Reis of Richland. While the two women still face getting the approval of the state Senate, The Easterner welcomes both Sonneland and Reis to Eastern community.

But to Governor Spellman, we have but one comment:

It's about time.

Both positions have been open for quite a while now. Sonneland replaces Fred Enlow, who resigned to take a job in California, and Reis replaces Andy Kelley, whose term expired last September.

So for the last five months, the governor has brushed over a potential 40-percent gap in our board. An occasional phone call to Olympia has usually netted the same reply—"the governor's agenda is full right now. Some action should be taken soon."

Soon would have been four months ago. Or even three months ago. But soon isn't March.

Fortunately, Andrew Kelly graciously agreed to continue serving on the board until a replacement for him was named. Thus we have had to worry about only a 20-percent gap in the board.

And luckily, no real major issues have come before the board in the time we've anxiously waited for the governor to act.

But if what some glibly, divisive issue had confronted us this past year? What if PUB expansion or shared governance or over enrollment had basted into a mushroom cloud of controversy?

Would it have been fair to students, the administration, faculty, Spokane, the state, or even the trustees themselves if a decision of major and lasting impact had been delayed by four, or even three, trustees rather than the constitutional-mandated five?

I think not.

It's especially aggravating to think about the problems that might have befallen us because The Easterner heard last year that one replacement at least might be named in early November.

Why wasn't Enlow replaced at that time? That would have allowed Kelly to bring the number to five, at least on an interim basis. Is the only answer "the governor is busy?"

Of course, Spellman is smart enough to know that we have had to worry about only a 20-percent gap in the board.

But to Governor Spellman, we have but one comment.

"The situation is critical at this time. The Nicaraguan economy, which depends heavily on only a few agricultural exports, has been terked under increasing attack from CIA-backed counterrevolutionaries. Several hundred million dollars worth of damage has already resulted from attacks such as the one against the vital oil storage facilities at the port of Corinto last October.

Nicaragua needs a successful coffee harvest to be able to purchase basic foodstuffs, medicines, space for industry and transportation, and oil. Because of the urgent political and military situation, many Nicaraguans have been mobilized in the defense of their country and cannot participate in the December-February coffee harvest.

That is why I have chosen to respond to Nicaragua's call for international workers to ensure a successful coffee harvest this year.

The United States, in its normal tradition of concern for the well-being of its citizens, is stepping up to the plate.

We have been asked to participate in an international coffee harvest, to provide a much-needed source of income for the people of Nicaragua this year.

It is really true that the people of Nicaragua, the world over, are in need of our help.

The people of Nicaragua need our help.

To all Eastern students and employees:
The Charles and Carole Hansen families want to thank you all for your thoughtfulness and help during our time of sorrow over the passing of Mable Coen.

It is really true that the people of Nicaragua need our help.

The Easterner is also looking for someone to work as a copy editor during our summer quarter. Interested persons should come to The Easterner office or call 359-7070.

The Easterner encourages responsible opinions and the discussion of issues, both on and off campus, in the form of letters to the editor.

Letters should be double-spaced and typewritten, with names and phone number of the writer included. Letters without names and phone numbers will not be published.

The Easterner reserves the right to edit all letters, but only for brevity. Bring letters to The Easterner office at room 119 in the PUB or mail them to The Easterner, PUB 119, EWU, Cheney, Washington, 99004.

Letters to the editor may submit published work as evidence of their journalistic competence.

Applications are now being accepted for the positions of editor and photo editor on the Eastern Washington University student newspaper, The Easterner.

Applicants for the position of editor must meet one of the following criteria:

- Completion of basic journalism courses in newswriting, editing and law.
- Served as the editor of a community college newspaper for not less than two quarters.
- Worked as a professional journalist for at least two years.
- Served as the editor of a community newspaper for at least two years.
- Served as an editor for The Easterner.
- Served as the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper.

The Easterner is in need of an additional photo editor to work during our time of sorrow over the passing of Mable Coen.

All applicants for the position of editor must submit published work as evidence of their journalistic competence.

Letters to the editor should be addressed to The Easterner, PUB 119, EWU, Cheney, Washington, 99004.
The excitement of video games can be enthralling to the point of addiction. The games in the PUB draw their share of addicts as the 400,000 quarters Eastern students spend on the machines each year would indicate.

More women high school grads going to college

About the same percentage of America's high school graduates went on to some sort of college education in 1978 as in 1980, and for the first time more women than men continued their education beyond high school.

Moreover, a student's race, socio-economic background and geographic location seem to play a role in deciding if the student will go on to college after high school, and if the student goes to a two-year or four-year school, the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) says in a new survey.

Over half the nation's high school seniors of 1980 went on to college, NCES' annual "High School and Beyond" survey found.

The enrollment rate was not uniformly high:

"The overall percentage (of students going to college) has been fairly constant in recent years," says Tom Snyder, NCES' education specialist.

"Through most of the seventies, the rate has hovered around 50 percent, except for during the Vietnam era when it was up somewhat," Snyder says.

Even if more high school graduates continued their educations in the three succeeding years after they graduated, the report reveals.

Besides the initial 54 percent who immediately enrolled in post-secondary schools, an additional 14 percent attended some form of post-secondary institution in the three years after their graduations.

The high school class of 1980 also marked the first time since World War II that more women than men went on to college.

By fall, 1980, 33 percent of the women had enrolled in four-year colleges and 19 percent went to two-year schools. Men's attendance rates were 30 percent and 19 percent, respectively.

Asian Americans had the highest college attendance rate of all racial and ethnic groups, the study shows.

Seventy-four percent of all Asian-American high school graduates went on to attend some form of college, compared to 51 percent for whites, 44 percent for blacks, 33 percent for Hispanics, and 34 percent for post-secondary education.

Of the students who scored high in academic ability tests in high school, nearly 80 percent went directly to college.

Sixty-four percent attended four-year colleges in fall, 1980. Only 15 percent went on to two-year colleges.

Among "average" students, 51 percent went on to college. Just over 21 percent of the "low-ability" students opted for some form of post-secondary education.

While race and academic ability played important roles in determining if students went on to college, socio-economic factors appear to have played a big role in determining what kinds of schools they chose.

Fifty-five percent of the students from high socio-economic families went to four-year colleges, compared to 30 percent of the middle-income students and 17 percent of the low socio-economic grades.

Geography also played an important role in choosing between two-year and four-year colleges, the study notes.

In the Northeast, 36 percent of the students went to four-year colleges, while 14 percent chose two-year schools. Students in most other regions picked four-year and two-year institutions in the same percentages, except in the West. There, 28 percent of the students went to two-year colleges and only 22 percent to four-year campuses.

The discrepancy reflects "a different pattern of state emphasis on two-year colleges in the West, particularly in California," Snyder asserts.

Council looking for assistants

By Ken Frederick

For Eastern students wishing to get involved in student government without the hassles of elections, a new position has recently been created.

The position, entitled council assistant, is the brainchild of Bob Nichols and Jim Popchock, both ASEWU councilmen. Stated to be instituted in an attempt to remove four positions will be open, ideally to freshmen, sophomores, or transfer students. Each assistant will be appointed by the ASEWU president, and would not be bound by term, however, students can serve a total of two quarters.

"The primary function of the position," said Popchock, "is to assist council members with research and work within their specialized area as necessary.

Nichols and Popchock have designed the position under the guidance of the council, so that the council assistants would be drawn from different student populations at Eastern. Each assistant would be a Spokane resident, an off-campus resident, and one an off-campus Cheney resident. The remaining member would be an at-large student, that is, not bound by residence requirements.

Nichols and Popchock are enthusiastic about the new position, which pays nothing except entertainment expenses, 44 percent of the assistant's time. "It has always been a real problem of turnover in the council," Nichols said. "We don't have a farm system."
Just the beginning?

The final 32 is just two wins away. That's what women's basketball coach Bill Smithpeters hopes his Eagles realize after losing in last Saturday's Mountain West Athletic Conference championships. Friday and Saturday victories will put Eastern into the NCAA Final Four, which is both the first time in school history and will clinch the Eagles their first automatic berth.

Eastern, which will meet Idaho Friday night at 8 p.m., notes that its game can be heard live on KEWF radio, station K.99. Should the Eagles win, they would take on the winner of the Montana-Niota State game on Saturday at 8:30 in the championship game. The game will be played live on KEWF at 4 p.m.

The weekend — with at least six wins over Idaho — could gain EWU an invitation to the women's National Invitational Tournament (NIT).

Old Henry Ford would have been proud.

If the inventors of America's first inexpensive cars had been watching women's basketball last weekend in Reno court, he'd have seen the Eastern Eagles' five strangers crank out 150 of the team's 166 points. The results were like Ford's first Tin Lizzie — more fancy, too.

Two well constructed wins as Eastern put together two hit-and-run rallies and a 25-0 run to bust that program to by Portland State on Friday, 89-60. The Eagles' record to 20-6, their first 20-win season since 1980. As Eastern played its final home games. EWU went into this weekend's MWAC Layoffs as the No. 2 seed behind Montana, and facing No. 3 Idaho on Friday night (8 PST) in first-round action. The Eagles started off slowly against Portland State's determined defense, which held Eastern to 39 percent shooting from the field in the first 26 minutes.

With two wins the Eagles further post-season honors is guaranteed with an automatic berth into the NCAA Final Four.

The Eagles wanted to reverse their 1983 results of 13-16 overall and 5-9 in conference. Without much difficulty they have turned in 20-6 and 15-2 marks.

Nothin' fancy, just 2 wins

Great day all over! Fay Zwarych, of course

Eastern's Resonne Monroe finished the Eagles' top all-around performer with a combined score of 32.80. She's shared the scoring honors twice with Lisa Comstock. And most points scored in a game (18) against Portland State's determination (13) for scoring average (current 13.1 for career) 20 points.

Coach Bill Smithpeters diagrams a play in the Eagle's regular-season finale last Saturday in Roscoe Court. Eastern enters the Mountain West championships 20-6 overall.

In five years, she wants to be on the cover of Muscle & Fitness. Fay Zwarych has simple goals, she said. After the graduation from Eastern, after a possible fling with British Columbia, in the future, she'll be an owner/ body builder. She's the best women's player I know, she said. After she graduates from Eastern, after a possible fling with British Columbia, in the future, she'll be an owner/body builder. She's the best women's player I know, she said.

We all think of Fay Zwarych. I always think of Fay Zwarych. She's the best offensive player he's coached in 12 years, not to slight Leon in any way. Fay Zwarych is simply the best offensive player in Eastern basketball history! she said. "Maria played is more names than Fay and against smaller colleges," Some would say Smithpeters in an envious position, having to choose just one player to start one next season. "When we're trying to recruit an offensive player - That's our No. 1 need, the best talent. You can afford to lose someone and break down. Fay's records he said. "Like they say, you have no records on the floor. It's a real shame that, to her nervous state she explained. Zwarych said she had some swollen ankles in her ankle when he examined it prior to surgery. Her jumps were stretched and torn which led to the ankle popping out and dislocating quite often. "I had to get a fancy tape job just to hold it (the foot) on, she said. Fay played in 36 games that year, scoring 65 points. If she had her sophomore year over, Zwarych would probably have shattered most records. Even now it'll take an extremely talented athlete to top her career bests in scoring average (currently 13.1 for career), one-season scoring (209) and most points scored in a game (35). The statistical notes go on... on... on... on. One final note: Zwarych has led the Eagles in scoring 31 off the last 53 games. She's shared scoring honors twice with Lisa Comstock.

By Rod Simmons Eastern first-year Portland State coach Jim Sollars said the small-town brought his team. "I was a case where we just did some silly things right at the end of the game that may have cost us down anyway," he said. Eastern's offense led to its first six minutes of the second half and led the Vikings to the scrap heap with a four-minute scoring binge. The Eagles piled up 25 of the next 29 points, at one point 16 straight, to take a 71-40 lead with eight minutes left. Portland State was unable to control Eastern's fast break, led by Lisa Comstock's 12 points and eight points, and Eastern out-rebounded their opponents 53-39 for the game.

She also drew several second-half fouls, and hit four of five from the free throw line.

"It's an accomplishment when people like Texas Tech and Tennessee, big hot-shot, call just to find out how we shot (in a particular match)," but, laments, "We get to get no little recognition on campus, and we're the only non-scholarship team and the only team west of the Mississippi to make it to nationals!"

A headline in the Walla Walla Union-Bulletin claims "Loves Heres named Mother of the Year for 1984 in Washington."

"Mother of the Year" is a formal honor that allows people to recognize a woman for her contributions to their community, family, or personal growth. It is usually awarded during Mother's Day, the first Sunday in May, which in 1984 was March 30th.

In the context of the Walla Walla Union-Bulletin, it is likely that the story follows Laura Heres's experience being named Mother of the Year. The story might include details about the nomination process, Laura's reactions, and the significance of the title in her life.

Laura Heres, as mentioned, was a 71-year-old woman who was named Mother of the Year in 1984. She appears to have been a significant figure in her family and community, possibly having raised children and being involved in various activities that contributed to her being recognized.

The article mentions that the good news is hidden, and it is important to recognize the efforts and contributions of people in one's life, not just in high-profile settings. The example of Laura Heres serves to illustrate this point.

The article might also discuss the implications of being named Mother of the Year, including the impact on Laura Heres's life and possibly findings from International Students who write about similar experiences.

Whereas "The Dresser" is an excellent drama that has received almost no publicity, "Sahara," starring Brooke Shields, is not a very impressive movie at all, though it has received quite a bit of publicity.

"Sahara," set in the late 1920's, is about a girl, Dale (played by Brooke Shields), who is determined to win a car race across the Sahara desert. In the beginning of the film, her father has made a prototype race car which he intends to drive in the Sahara race. Unfortunately, for him, he is involved in a car accident and dies shortly afterwards, leaving Dale to drive in the race.

But, she is informed, no woman would be allowed to cross the starting line. So, the realizations of other recent movies about people who can't get what they want because of their natural gender, she disguises herself as a man in order to get across the starting line. Once the race has begun, she throws away her hat and false moustache and reveals her hair to the other drivers.

There are two routes for the race, a short one that leads straight through a tribal war, and a long one through the desert. The short route supposedly can be driven in three days, and the long route in five or six.

Dale and one other driver decide to take the short route, and they get caught up with warring desert tribes. Dale and her crew of two men are promptly taken prisoner, and the leader of the tribe falls in love with her, the "plain-eyed demon," as a few others call her. The movie's biggest problem is in depiction of time. The entire race doesn't seem like it could possibly take more than a few hours to drive. Although Dale is taken out of the race on the second day, on the last day it seems as though she only drives two or three miles to the finish line. Also, after the race is over, two men on camels show up immediately, as though the camels can run almost as fast as the cars...having come from the same starting point, leaving a few minutes after the car did.

Most of the movie is the occurrence backstage before, during, and after the tour's performance of King Lear, starring Sir. It is exciting and intense drama about the relationship between the two men (both up for an Academy Award for best actor for their parts in the same film), the way Norman does everything for Sir, and the way Sir doesn't seem to appreciate Norman.

"The Dresser" is set early in World War II, and the fact that the city is being bombed now and then adds more to the grimness of the situation the elderly actors are already in.

Singing Eastern grad picks up another award

When baritone Thomas Hampson sang at the Spokane Symphony concert Tuesday evening, he probably wasn't sure whom he met more at home with—the audience or the orchestra.

The 1977 Eastern graduate has been a favorite of Spokane audiences since 1974, when he sang in a production of Handel's Messiah. Over 2,000 people came to the Symphony performance Tuesday.

But Hampson was accompanied by an orchestra of which only half its members are Eastern artists—in residence, faculty alumni or students, a reflection of the university's strong and continuing relationship with Spokane's musical life.

Hampson, who was presented the University's Distinguished Alumnus Award Tuesday evening, began his professional career as a member of the symphony while studying government at Eastern, and served a term as AS president in 1975-76.

His last performance in Spokane prior to the Tuesday concert was in 1980. In 1981 he won the national Metropolitan Opera Auditions, and for the past three years has been a member of the Deutsche Oper am Rhein in Dusseldorf, Germany. At the age of 28, he is further along in his career than most other young singers in his age group.

"His performance was inspiring," said Bruce Davidson, a violinist who is one of 10 Spokane Symphony EWU Scholars with the orchestra.

"Usually when you think of musicians of solo caliber, you think of contemporaries such as Juiiiard or Interlachen. To see a musician of such depth coming from Eastern," he said.

Davidson, a 23-year-old junior, is one of six symphony members receiving tuition grants this year through the scholars program. And one of the orchestra's 15 principal artists are associated with the university.

Hampson was presented the award by President George Frederickson and AS President Gina Hames.

Stephen Christopher, vice-president of academic affairs, said it was not a provision of the gentlemen's agreement between EWU and the industrial education program.

When the program was presented at EWU before December, Kinney said the council did not need to review the program, as the industrial education program for the computer masters and baccalaureates had been submitted to the CPE last December.

"If he had a understandable concern, it was done because of the academics and the future of the computer science program," said Stephen Christopher.

The technical science program will no longer be a part of the "gentlemen's agreement" as a result of the recent decision of the council to eliminate the program.

"I will continue to make sure that the people participating in the program, Kinney said, and the faculty of the industrial program submitted a report to the CPE last December outlining the role, curriculum and progress of the industrial education program at Eastern.

"Most of the people involved were teachers who are returning to further their educations," Kinney said.

The enrollment figures submitted to the CPE by Eastern showed only one person enrolled during the academic year involved in the masters program and seven during the summer quarter. The figures can be deceiving, as Martin said the people pursuing their master's have seven years and do not always have the time during the regular school year to apply.

"Most of the people involved are teachers who are returning to further their educations," Kinney said.

Murphy said the exact figures for the people participating in the program at WSU were also hard to determine but they were "probably comparable to those at Eastern." Fredericson pointed toward the need for the university to adopt computer-related programs to better meet the needs of the job market.

"I know, " Kinney said. "We have reached a decision on the fate of the program at Western before December." Kinney also denied there was any agreement between EWU and the CPE for a trade-off.

"It was determined to take a new direction, Kinney said. Kinney was the primary evidence used in the agreement between EWU and the industrial education program for the baccalaureates.

"We have been working for several years on the academic program," Kinney said. "We have been trying to hold back the tears in our eyes.

"We can't imagine the hurt when you lose a kid," said Kinney. "I didn't love Jed any more than the parents of those marines in Beirut.

"The program at WSU was presented at the meeting where the determination was made to cancel the program, but did not speak out against the move.

"Christopher was unavailable for comment.

The technical science program has already been granted by the legislature. Fredericson said it was part of the "gentlemen's agreement" the others would be granted in April.

The industrial education program will no longer be a part of the "gentlemen's agreement" as a result.

"As we look at new and emerging problems we're going to have to look at our programs that have low productivity," said Duane Thompson, provost for academic affairs at Eastern. The degree in industrial education, in my judgement would have been recommended for elimination anyway.

Kesey continued to express concern for the current lack of safety devices aboard school buses and vans, and the people who drive them. "The people that are using these buses couldn't get jobs driving Greyhound buses of trucks.

Not because they're not good people, they (schools and universities) just don't have the money to train them," Kesey said.

The athletic programs of schools and universities should spend less time repairing players for minor injuries and should spend more time ensuring that their players are safe and well-protected from tragedies such as the recent one.

"When the Pac-10 starts fitting Oregon State for leaving two hours early for a game with Arizona State, instead of checking to see if the cold conditions are like, then something is wrong," said Kesey.

Kesey, sometimes pacing to suppress the choking in his throat as he talked about his son, said, "I didn't love Jed any more than the parents of those marines in Beirut.
