A somewhat unorthodox, if not psychologically unsound desire to get to the bottom of things keep Ranger club members on the descent. A stout rope keeps each ROTC-sponsored rappeller from arriving at the bottom too quickly. The organization, captained by Capt. Bruce Anderson and Culver Stone, provided a demonstration last Thursday at the Phase II "Rock." The fellow on the way down (above) is Troy Thrall.

Program keys on health

By LISA ROSENAU
Staff Writer

This spring quarter, University Dining Services is introducing a new health awareness program. Debbie Cannata, dietician at Tawanka, and Karen Raver, R.N. health promotions coordinator, have combined health, nutrition, and fitness into two months of seminars, exhibits, and fitness activities to help increase student awareness about their own health.

"Students need to take responsibility for their own health," said Cannata. "Students don't think of consequences of their present health style. They need to be aware of the 'down-the-road' diseases and what they need to be doing to prevent them now."

The idea for the program stems from last April's National Nutrition Month. Cannata and Raver combined forces last November and devised a program to involve more than nutrition, thus "Healthbeat."

The focus will be on health fitness, aiming at Bloomsday. For instance, there will be a biathlon on the 19th of this month, combining swimming and running, followed on the 21st by a fun run sponsored by the Total Fitness Program.

Cannata said she hoped the programs will be well received by the students. Programs scheduled for April are: Thursday, April 5—"Relax-for Good Health," Peggy Gazette, and Eastern professor will help students learn how to cope with stress with different relaxation techniques. This will be held in the Dressler Formal Lounge from 7-8 p.m.

On Thursday, April 19, three area dieticians will present a seminar entitled "Controversies in Nutrition: Food Additives and Preservatives, Artificial Sweeteners, and Caffeine." This will focus on the problems of "hidden poisons" in our food and their effects on us. This program will be held in PUB 3A from 2-3:30 p.m.

"Self Health Care and the Use of Over-the Counter Drugs" will be the topic of a seminar, Wednesday, April 25, from 3-4 p.m. in room 3A of the PUB. Charles Hough, M.D., is the speaker and will talk on health conditions that commonly affect college-age populations.

A Tuesday in Tawanka on the 24th of April is slated to bring together the elements of health, nutrition, and fitness. Entitled "Health Yourself," this will be held in Tawanka from 4-7 p.m.

The last scheduled event for April will be held on the 26th. This workshop, "Goal Setting for Health," will be led by Karen Raver, R.N. and health promotions coordinator here at EWU. As the title suggests, the topic will be on how students can identify and change health behaviors by goal setting.

These are just the first month's activities. There will be more, especially as Bloomsday draws near. Watch for more details.

Eastern football leaves for Albi

Compiled from staff accounts

In a move to accommodate the demands of a Division I schedule slated with seven Big Sky Conference foes, all Eastern home football games will be played in Spokane's spacious Joe Albi Stadium next fall.

And with Washington State University's announcement that the Cougars will play no home games at Albi next fall, Eastern should have a chance to generate momentum with a Spokane audience to push attendance at Eagle games to a level similar to Big Sky teams, whose conference EWU is still seeking to join, said President H. George Frederickson.

Eastern's schedule, which is expected to be released next week, includes all Big Sky schools except Weber State, including an October 20 Homecoming date with perennial power University of Idaho.

Apparently, Eastern is on its way to winning the artificial phase of the turf wars in Spokane thanks in part to the Cougars plan to play all of their games in Martin Stadium in Pullman.

Although attendance at Eastern games over the past few years has been sparse, athletic department officials feel that the move to Spokane, coupled with an extensive marketing plan, can boost attendance at the Idaho game to 7,000 to 8,000. Woodward Field on the Cheney campus has an estimated capacity of 5,500, and the press box is considered sub-standard at the Big Sky level.

Eastern's men's Athletic Director Ron Raver has said on numerous occasions that athletic events should be played on campus. But in this particular instance, the Eagle AD is stuck between the proverbial rock and hard place.

Frederickson pointed out he wasn't the person to make the decision to move all home games to Spokane, but he agrees with the venture.

"All I can say is the majority of our students are from Spokane. They would have easier access to the games," Frederickson said, "and the majority of our alums live in Spokane. They would have easier access."

Frederickson said the university must try not to be all things to all people, trying to please the dormitory students and a few Cheney merchants on one hand, yet try to court the Big Sky schools and the Spokane media exposure and a chance for a 10,000 gate on the other.

"In as much as the choice has been made (to move all home games to Spokane's 36,000-seat Joe Albi Stadium) the duty now would be for better promotions . . . extra special ways of dealing with the concerns and interests of the dormitory and apartment students in Cheney . . . a care and concern for the means and interests of the Cheney merchants," Frederickson said.

Robot stars at HEC dedication ceremony

By KALENE PHILLIPS
Staff Writer

Hero, the two-foot robot, rolled across the long table, raised his mechanical arm and whacked the "ribbon" of computer printout paper officially dedicating the computer facilities at the Higher Education Center in Spokane Tuesday.

Although Hero danced to show off some of his programmed capabilities and spoke in one of his 64 voice tones, the dedication focused on the three computer laboratories at the First and Wall learning center. Included in the $150,000 second floor complex are Eastern's new Micro-Computer laboratory, the Software Lab and the Digital Design Laboratory facilities.

"An event such as this represents a distinguished accomplishment," EWU President George Frederickson said.

"It's our way of saying to Spokane that Eastern is taking some very positive steps toward providing technological education."

Much of the equipment is only a few months old. The micro-computer laboratory has 16 desktop Apple II computer systems for use in computer literacy classes, microcomputers and business and computer graphics, said Hugh Sullivan, dean of the School of Mathematical Sciences and Technology.

The software lab has computer terminals linked to the larger computer center on the Cheney campus.

Digital design offers students instructions in designing computer programs and in systems analysis.

About 300 Eastern students currently use the facilities and equipment in the downtown laboratories, according to Terry Mauer of Eastern's public relations department.

The equipment is part of an expanding School of Mathematical Sciences and Technology established last November. Plans for continued growth of the school include finishing construction of the computer center next to Tawanka Commons on the Cheney campus by fall quarter and including specific degrees related to computers in the curriculum, Frederickson said.

"HERO"

The Council for Post Secondary Education will consider approval in April of two bachelor of science degrees—one in information systems and one in computer technology, Frederickson said.

An undergraduate degree in mechanical technology and a graduate degree in computer science are also under consideration, Mauer said.

Library system complaints addressed

By OPENDACK
Staff Writer

A number of complaints concerning John F. Kennedy Library and the services it offers have been brought to the attention of The Easterner. These are not necessarily new problems but rather problems that have plagued the library and its users for some time.

A random survey conducted in the PUB of 50 EWU students who were asked what should be done to improve the library raised the following issues. Dr. Walter H. Baumann, head librarian, took time out from his busy schedule to address these grievances.

Inadequate study area

Remember the last time you went to the library to research a project, cram for an exam or just catch up on homework and found the task distressing or impossible because some other students were having such a great time visiting that you couldn't hear yourself think? Ever wonder what you could do about it?

Baumann said the library could have guards posted by each door. However, the fact remains that the library cannot afford to hire people to perform this function. He is aware that this is a problem and urges students who cannot study because of noise to lodge their complaints at the front desk and something will be done. Baumann also said that it is library policy that the first floor is the "noisy" floor, that the basement and second floor are reserved for those who need quiet.

Inadequate copy facilities

The complaints most students had were: 1) The price of copying is excessive. 2) There are too few copy machines. 3) The quality of copies is poor.

Baumann disagrees that the 10-cent charge is excessive. However, he does agree that we need more and better copy machines. Again, because of finances, this equipment cannot be purchased at the present and students shouldn't expect to see this problem resolved in the near future, he said.

Just to illustrate how much work

our present copy machines put out, Baumann made the following information available:

Copies made in February:
1st floor 21,000
2nd floor 22,000
Photoduplicating 31,000

Poor typewriters

Now, here's one grievance we can't blame on the library. Why? Because the library did not purchase those typewriters and it was not their idea to do so.

Those six typewriters were originally purchased by our ASEWU in 1971. Two years ago some typewriters were replaced. The ASEWU bought them, and the library voluntarily maintains them.

According to Baumann, the ASEWU didn't have a lot of money to spend at the time, nevertheless the decision was to purchase a quantity of typewriters rather than just one or two good ones.

Periodicals

Some of you may have noticed that many of your favorite magazines are no longer subscribed to by our library. The reason again is a financial one.

In the 81-83 biennium, when state funds were cut, everyone suffered and not just the library. But, Baumann said, the library system suffered greater hardships due to inflation.

While the rest of the economy was enjoying a leisurely 7 to 8 percent inflation rate, the subscription rates and book prices were skyrocketing at a 15- to 16-percent clip. The library is just now getting on its feet again. The recovery will take some time but things are getting better, said Baumann.

Though some magazines must necessarily be cut from the subscription rolls, there is still the matter of material appropriations. The library still subscribes to Coe, Glamour, People and Vogue while magazines such as National Geographic, Natural History and Geo continue to be unavailable and not subscribed to. The questionable magazines suggested by students surveyed were objectionable not because they are bad magazines, some said, but because they are inappropriate for an academic library.

Laurie Harmon peruses one of the "entertainment" magazines available at Kennedy Library. Some students have complained that the library doesn't subscribe to enough "intellectual" periodicals.

When asked who decided and by what standards of value these decisions are made, Baumann stated that many of the magazines ordered are requested by the students themselves. Others are decided upon by the library staff according to what they think is needed, and requests by the various academic departments throughout the university are also considered, said Baumann.

Book Renewal

Ever check out a book at Kennedy and try to renew that same book at the main library in Spokane, or vice versa? Ever turn in a Dewey Decimal book, one that does not have a bar code, at a Spokane library and then be told by Kennedy that you have an overdue book - your records continuing to show that you have an overdue book for another two weeks?

Baumann admits the problem exists and has existed for some time, but the problem is one they are working on and will be reconciled, he said.

Baumann explained that the problem exists because the computers they are now using are not entirely compatible with the computers the Spokane Library uses. Reprogramming the computers is an expensive and time-consuming task, but already, Baumann said, the computers at John F. Kennedy have the capability of stipulating which books are being requested and used the most, making it possible for the first time for the university to know when extra copies should be ordered.

Vandalism

Research has shown most vandalism of library books occurs on materials concerning Judaism, nude photography, homosexuality, and art. Baumann said books which continue to disappear from the library shelves - many of them, curiously enough, dealing with the occult or chess - have been removed from the shelves and placed in the Closed Stack Area for safety. Other books in the Closed Stack Area have been placed there because of their rarity - one of a kind, limited or special editions - books that are irreplaceable.

Baumann explained that it would be impossible to check every book for defacings - the cost to employ people specifically for this purpose would be prohibitive. But, he said that the library would appreciate it if these graffiti-like mutilations or missing pages were brought to the staff's attention. It is only in this manner that these materials can be restored to satisfactory condition or replaced.

Book security at HEC

Because of the location of the Spokane Center's - in an open bay unequipped with a security turnstile - book theft is a problem. Library users are allowed to take materials from the second floor library to the basement typewriter room. Consequently, librarians have no way of keeping track of the materials removed.

Baumann said that some of the security equipment has already been purchased and delivered while some parts remain to be ordered/delivered. The projection date for the security system installation is this fall.

The library at the Center has not, as yet, been hooked up to the computer system. All checking in or out is performed by hand. The new system has been purchased but is not installed. This installation process will take some time and is an expensive step in updating the HEC Library. Baumann said when the library has the funds available to complete the installation, it will.

The reason given for most of the problems that exist at Eastern's library has been lack of funds. How our library compares with other schools, who decides how much the library gets, why they get so little, and how that amount compares with the overall financial condition of this university will be the subject of part two of "Eastern's Library."

'Career Week' next week

By LORRI FRICKS
Staff Writer

Graduates entering the job market, as well as students deciding on a major, can benefit from the opportunities Career Week (April 9-13) has to offer.

Career Week begins with a "nooner" on Monday, provided by the theatre group, "A Little Traveling Music."

On Tuesday, 29 representatives from different business fields will be present for the Career Fair in the PUB MPR. This event will be from 10 a.m.-1 p.m. and will feature representatives from the accounting field, the Bon Marche, the department of Social and Health Services, First Interstate, Hewlett-Packard, and many others.

Mock interviews will be given on Wednesday to help students improve their interviewing skills and their chance of securing a job. Application forms and resumes will be required, comparable to a professional interview, with the interviewers scheduled to be Anita Galentine from Keytronics, Diana Groh of Farmer and Merchants Bank, and Richard Weeks from Central Pre-Mix. Students must sign up this week to be eligible for an interview appointment.

On Thursday, author Anita Gates will be speaking on the most promising careers for the future. According to Gates, the ideal job candidate today is a bilingual computer expert with a background in health care and a law degree.

Actually, Gates does stress that two careers are better than one. For example, personnel is a good field and so is insurance, therefore a job in the personnel department of an insurance company gives a person double security. Other promising fields include occupational therapists, physical therapists, dental hygienists, business machine repair people, computer service technicians, systems analysts, respiratory therapy workers and travel agents.

Career Week ends Friday with a Job Options Symposium in Kingston Auditorium, sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi. There will be several speakers present from different business fields to talk about their companies and answer questions.

Sponsored by the ASEWU and the Student Employment Office, this is the fourth annual Career Week at Eastern. Linda Hejdyt, assistant manager of Student Employment said, "I think it (Career Week) is a learning experience for everybody. It's a medium for the students to learn what this area has to offer and a medium for employers to learn what a resource Eastern has to offer as far as young people going in to the business world."

Comparable Worth resolution slow

By KALENE PHILLIPS
Staff Writer

The recent successful lawsuit against Washington state proves the state practices employment discrimination against female and minority groups, Gail Spaeth told a noontime audience last week in the Women's Center.

And a Higher Education Jobs study shows pay scales for these groups start lower and level off while pay scales for men in similar jobs start higher and continue to rise she said.

But confusion over the Comparable Worth issue—equal pay for jobs of equal worth—and an appeal by the attorney general's office has made final resolution of the pay issue slow and difficult.

Spaeth, a state employee and litigant in the lawsuit against the state, paced in front of an overflow crowd as she explained her eight-year outspoken effort on behalf of herself and other state employees for equal pay.

"I've worked for secretary's wages all these years and the people that were promoted always seemed to be the men. I backed them, cleaned up their act, prepared their paperwork, kept them accurate, did the bookkeeping and worked long hours.

"I also made out their paychecks. They made twice as much as I did and they played golf twice a week."

Comparable Worth rewards workers according to their relative skills, efforts, responsibilities and working conditions, Spaeth said. It is designed to eradicate the disparity between women's and men's salaries for jobs of equal value.

An evaluation committee representing Washington state employees has reported that overall, women receive about 20 percent lower pay than men for comparable work.

For example, a Clerk Typist—a job traditionally held by a woman—and a Warehouse Worker I—traditionally a man's position—were rated with Comparable Worth criteria and both received 94 points.

The Clerk Typist, however, is currently paid ten ranges below that of Warehouse Worker I.

Recent legislation provides pay adjustments according to Comparable Worth criteria "depending on the availability of funds." The legislation is vague and offers little in actual material benefits to state employees, Spaeth said.

"A lawsuit seems to be the only way we can get what we want," Spaeth said, since legislation is proving to be an inadequate solution.

And last December state employees were awarded back pay to 1979 and immediate changes in pay differences by U.S. District Judge Tanner's federal court in Tacoma.

But the state argues that the mandate from Tanner would be so costly as to bankrupt the budget. Estimates of the cost of implementation range from $75 million to $1 billion in combined retroactive and current wages to state employees if the matter is settled this year.

"The state was not allowed to put on a trial," Christine Gregoire, deputy attorney general and one of the lawyers for the state, said in a recent telephone interview.

"At the first trial Tanner refused to allow testimony from 11 of the 13 state witnesses and only two state documents were admitted as evidence," Gregoire said.

Tanner did virtually the same thing at the next two trials, she said. The state says they are not liable for the Comparable Worth theory and they deny "intentional discrimination." The state also argues the issue of back pay on the grounds of "abusive discretion," Gregoire said.

And some economists question the compatibility of Comparable Worth with the economic law of supply and demand, according to Charles Waldouer, economics professor at Widner University.

The State of Washington's position is also supported by the Reagan Administration. Justice department lawyers submit that "it is difficult to assess the value of jobs and which ones were comparable," according to recent news reports.

The case has gone to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, in San Francisco and Spaeth said she thought it may take another two years to resolve the issue.

"Nobody has really figured out what it's going to cost. But we can't believe the argument that the state can't afford it. They can pay us," Spaeth said.

"We have already made up our minds what we're going to do and we won't back down now."

Students can soak up a few rays in spite of old Sol in one of these new tanning booths.

Radiation booths new Phase in body tanning

By MOLLY ANSELMO
Staff Writer

Summertime and suntans go together like strawberries in daiquiris, but unfortunately Cheney sunshine doesn't always cooperate with would-be sun gods and goddesses. One solution to this lack of sunshine in early spring is tanning booths.

Tanning booths have recently been installed in the men's and women's locker rooms of the Phase II, and offer a fast and relaxing way to get a head start on a golden summer tan. They are available 7:30 a.m. to 10 p.m., seven days a week, and a $30 contract covering ten sessions must be purchased in advance from the cashier's office in Showalter Hall.

Many myths surround the process of tanning by artificial rays. Some say that ultra-violet rays are harmful to the skin and that they will cause the skin to burn rather than tan. Neither of these should be a worry with the tanning method used in the Phase. The method not only dispels these myths but it claims to be fast and effective, with the participants achieving a significant tan in just ten sessions.

Participants get their tan in the booth while laying on a Super Tan suntan bed. The bed is comprised of twelve bulbs on top and twelve on bottom which envelope the body in tanning rays, allowing for a quick and easy to tan, rain or shine.

Now there is no need to let a lack of sunshine stop you from getting a great tan this summer. If you're not going to hit the sunny beaches of California before swimsuit season, a few quick trips to the Phase can at least make you look like you did.

"It's a matter of time"

There's no doubt about it, said John Hulpke, EWU business instructor.

"It's just a matter of time," he said, before Comparable Worth salary adjustments impact the economy and private industry.

And Eastern's business majors are required to complete a course that explores the changes Comparable Worth proposes. These are changes they need to know about to prepare them for the business world, he said.

"You look back a few years ago at General Motors," Hulpke said. Hulpke said the State of Washington shouldn't expect to fare any differently in the Comparable Worth litigation. And the outcome will have a direct effect on private industry.

Businesses need to be considering the unavoidable changes that can only become more costly by delaying salary adjustments dictated by Comparable Worth.

"Isn't Seafirst or Rainier Bank right around the corner?" he said.

The City of Spokane Union Local 207 began reorganizing clerical salaries about two years ago using criteria gathered from state and union Comparable Worth studies, said Lydia Sims, director of Affirmative Action for the City of Spokane.

But until the case is settled, no changes in Eastern's state employee salaries to comply with Comparable Worth have been made.

"At the current time there is really no approved method as to how that would be determined," said Ivan Zarling, Eastern's director of personnel administration.

Spokane move a smart choice

By ROBERT SILER
Associate Editor

Eastern's decision to move its home football games to Spokane will come as a shock to many.

Though games have been played in Spokane's Joe Albi Stadium in the past, this year marks the first time the home schedule, including the October 20 homecoming contest with the University of Idaho, will be played in Spokane.

Though the first reaction is that all home games should be played on campus, the University's decision should be vigorously supported. It gives Eastern a chance to better serve its Spokane students and gives the football program the chance to become more self-sufficient.

Attendance at Eastern games has been sparse in the past.

One problem contributing to it has been a lack of consistency in opponents, resulting in little of the attention-drawing rivalry that brings crowds to games.

Also, many of Eastern's students are older, married people, who would rather spend their weekends at home with their families. Especially for Spokane residents, who make up over half the student population, it hasn't made sense in the past to commute to Cheney to watch a football game.

By holding games in Spokane and perhaps offering special price reductions to families of students, Eastern should be able to boost attendance of its Spokane students.

And as the University's football program continues to grow, and as it consistently schedules opponents from the Big Sky Conference, interest in Eagle football should grow in the Spokane area.

While Woodward Field in Cheney has served the school well in the past, it has room for only about 5,000 fans. The Homecoming game has the potential, if both teams are playing well, to turn out 8,000 paying customers—lost revenue if the game were played in Cheney.

A comprehensive, yet low-budget marketing plan put together by the athletic program should help target the needs of all potential Eastern football fans. Dorm students and Cheney residents, for example, should be able to ride into Spokane on game day in commuter buses or trains.

Helping the school in this endeavor is the fact that Washington State University has not scheduled any football games in Spokane for the first time in years. This continued indication of WSU's longstanding indifference to Spokane should be enough of an impetus to show to the area that Eastern, not WSU, is Spokane's university.

Especially gratifying is the apparent willingness of the managers of Albi Stadium to accommodate Eastern. The rock-hard artificial surface in the stadium, installed at WSU's insistence, will be renovated this spring with new underpadding that will make the surface as soft, if not softer, than real grass.

About the only real injuries from Eastern's move into Albi will be to Cheney-area merchants, who have come to depend on the extra revenue generated by the football games.

There are no easy answers for their dilemma, and they will undoubtedly suffer.

But Cheney will always be able to make a living in association with Eastern. For too long this school has not been responsive enough to the needs of Spokane. We need to continue moving in that direction.

In five years, if Eastern is able to develop a competitive football program that consistently draws an appreciative audience, perhaps the money can be found to renovate Woodward Field and move the games back to Cheney. The fans would follow.

And perhaps, in five years, the biggest football game in the state won't be between WSU and the University of Washington for the Apple Cup, but between WSU and Eastern for the championship of the Palouse—if the Cougars dare to quit ducking us.

Let the artificial turf war begin.

The mice are playing

Which three Eastern administrators were able to take time from their busy schedules to drink beer and play video games all afternoon last Thursday?

No names, but one of them has a very active job, another's name implies he speaks straight and to the point, and the third, well, we doubt if he ate at his own food emporium that day.

Perhaps, on those hot deadline days, when we can't find some of EWU's important administrators to chat with, we've been dialing their offices in error. No doubt we should have the numbers of all the local saloons nearby.

It's interesting to note that last Thursday Eastern's top tiger was away—perhaps explaining why the mice (or is that rats?) had time to play. Maybe, if he were around more often, people wouldn't so easily be able to get his goat (eee!)

Maybe Eastern has become so technologically proficient that all university business can be handled by phone, even if that phone is in a bar during regular University office hours.

Or are we making a big mistake? Perhaps the administration has become so efficient that four-hour, beer-bust lunches have become a standard reward.

What do you think?

Arabs: Americans misinformed

We hear more each day about the Middle East from just about every mass media source you can name.

We've all heard that Arabs are rich and have harems.

Many American have heard that the Arabs know nothing of Jesus Christ, that they worship Mohammed and/or pray to statues.

But none of the above is true.

The religious faith of most Arabs is Islam.

To a devout Muslim, however, Islam is more than his religion; his government—indeed his entire life—is based upon Islamic principles.

Arab countries, as with all countries, have people who are rich, people who are middle class and people who are poor.

Those who are rich are very rich and those who are poor are very poor.

The difference between Arab countries and others is that the Arab countries take very good care of their poor people. They give them food and money, but are careful not to let them know where it comes from.

According to Islamic law, a man is allowed up to four wives.

That leads to the misconception, that of a "harem."

The harem is a concept unknown to an Arab; in the Arabic language "harem" means nothing more than "women."

According to Islam, there are three religions revealed by God—Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

Since a Muslim reads the Koran many times throughout his life and since the Koran is a comprehensive study of all three revealed religions, many Muslims know as much if not more, about Judaism and Christianity as many followers of those two faiths do.

Statues, or idols, have no place in the Muslim home.

Mohammed is regarded as no more than a prophet and a man whose good example should be followed.

Yes, there are some Arabs who wave their money for everyone to see.

There are some Arabs who take many wives, and there are some Arabs who do not follow Islam properly.

Although they are few in number, they are the ones on whom the media focus.

The media seem interested in only one thing, catching the public eye, and if there is one thing this minority of Arabs can do, it is to make an interesting—if not good—story.

It is time for Americans to wake up and quit believing everything they hear.

They have been handed—and have accepted without question—a biased opinion about a group of people whom they know very little about and which, upon closer inspection, proves to be false.

The time has come for the American people to open their eyes and put an end to the Arabian myth.

Spring's temptations spell trouble

By STUART MCDOWALL

With spring officially sprung, complete with its green grass, baseball, golf, shorts and sunglasses, we once again face serious decisions.

Life is filled with choices, I've been told. Leisure is definitely important, but how do we go about prioritizing the many activities that seem to scream as the days get longer and the tans grow deeper?

It's a strange thing, this spring business. People seem to perk up a little—we see couples start to pair off, and we just feel like doing more.

Spring fever snowballs, I think, because just as we begin to want to have fun in the sun, others start feeling the same way. Invitations to chuck the books and run off with our friends increase—as do the number of smiles we see on campus. It seems like people are blooming right along with the flowers.

A romantic notion, but I guess that shows how the season has already affected me.

Unfortunately, as this play/fun orientation rises, so do other more serious concerns.

For seniors, there's the worry of finding a job after graduation—indeed for most of us the job spectre looms large, whether it's a career or just summer employment.

But who wants to worry about that stuff when we can go fishing or bicycling, or just have a picnic at Turnbull with a favorite friend?

Who wants to study when they can be playing softball? Combine the call of leisure with a dreamy spring fever state and academic discipline seems to melt like the year's first Popsicle.

Our professors, of course, are immune to the syndrome. Class requirements remain the same, lectures are as "inspiring" as ever—so how do we concentrate on course, not cloth, material?

A lot of the lecture boredom problem is related to how well we are prepared for class. Since goofing off is what spring's all about, homework naturally suffers.

Reading while tanning is popular, but somehow our attention drifts away as winds blow the pages, bees buzz us, Frisbees sail overhead and the ever-present call of "going to the party?" echoes across campus. Somehow the sensations of warmth and fresh air tend to reduce our ability to fully appreciate the jewels of knowledge we're reading but not comprehending.

Try getting up earlier in the morning, sitting by a sunlit window with a cup of coffee to do your studying. We conditioned ourselves to wake up over the winter months when mornings were dark. The sun is rising much earlier, notwithstanding by distractions, is an excellent time for learning.

So much for the pep talk. It's time for reality. The unwritten law of spring quarter is: never take classes that are considered "hard." For most of us, there are pesky General University Requirement courses that must be taken. To me, the acronym GUR has another meaning: Get Unbelievably Ripped.

The 100-level classes are especially convenient for spring studies. The University is forcing us to sit through them, yet we foolishly try to "get them out of the way" early in our college careers. A better way to maximize spring fun while still maintaining a decent GPA is to spread these "bonehead" classes over four quarters. For seniors, this is an excellent way to spend that final quarter.

Of course, for many of us it's too late to reschedule, or we're taking the third section of a year-long program. Does this spell doom as we watch this year's work wash away in the suds of a freshly tapped keg?

Certainly not. Take a lesson from our top students—you know, the guys who make learning look so easy. Ask one, and he or she will tell you the key is time management.

As we consider this, up crops that nagging spring issue: priorities.

Are academics really that important when compared to fun? Most of us are still young, so why are we forced to "worry about the future" at the same time when we're supposed to be having "the best years of our lives?"

The pangs of spring need not take control of our lives. In fact, thanks to Cheney's infamous weather history, we may not have to worry at all. Frisbees don't fly so well when it's raining.

Why can't we get any concerts?

By SUSAN WALSDORF
Staff Writer

The Pretenders, Huey Lewis and the News, Van Halen and Yes are all top bands that have performed throughout the Northwest at universities other than EWU. Why can't Eastern bill any of these blockbuster concerts?

The only major concert held at EWU this year was the lone appearance of The Tubes last December. The lack of ticket sales for this event resulted in the loss of thousands of dollars to the university said Assistant Coordinator of Student Activities, Mike Smith.

"Band managers decide basically where the band goes," said Smith. "Their management usually prefers to go through a promoter rather than a school."

When bands do decide to go through the schools, they look at how well previous concerts there fared—not just how well the past concerts sold out but also how well the job was actually handled.

"They see how you've done in the past. Our record (for attendance) is not too good," said Smith. "But we do have a four-star rating for doing the job right."

Another problem encountered is the seating space that EWU can offer. Reese Court seats 6,000 people, which is the second largest holding in the Spokane area. The Spokane Coliseum holds 9,000. Often, Eastern is bidding against WSU for bands and when the fact emerges that WSU's Friel Court holds 12,000 people, double the amount of Reese, Pullman wins out. Smith said that there is a possibility for Eastern to become a ticket outlet for WSU next year.

Smith has been involved with the scheduling of activities for a number of years. Before coming to EWU, he worked at Western where he brought them such acts as Kenny Loggins and Al Stewart. Smith was recently involved in an attempt to schedule Huey Lewis and the News for an appearance at EWU. Eastern was contacted about hosting Huey Lewis over a month-and-a-half ago.

"At that time, he wasn't that hot," said Smith. The cost to Eastern would have been $12,000 for the band's salary and $3,000 for production expenses.

"I've never met a band that's not in it for money," said Smith. He finally did make an offer for the Huey Lewis concert but Albatross Productions jumped into the picture.

"Albatross Productions is probably the second biggest promoter

The Greg Kihn Band's 1982 concert at Eastern drew only about 1,200 people. It was anything but a financial success, for the school and the band. Is that why they played at the Cotton Club this year?

in the Northwest," said Smith. Albatross started bidding for Huey Lewis as Eastern fell from the bidding race. "Eastern is in a bad situation for getting good shows," said Smith.

The two bands that may be prospects in Eastern's future include Ratt and Insect Surfers. Ratt has produced a video that is seen on MTV. "These groups want to come here for exposure; the groups that already have exposure can go anywhere," said Smith.

So if you are looking for good concerts, look farther than EWU—at least for the time being.

Academic senate to meet to discuss proposal

By ROBERT SILER
Staff Writer

The Academic senate, idle since February while the administration prepared a response to the senate's shared governance document, meets the next two Mondays to consider the administration's proposal.

The administration document differs from the statement approved by the senate in February in two major ways, said Wayne Hall, president of the faculty organization.

First, the document has been broken into two sections, separating the principles of shared governance into one part and the procedures used to resolve disagreements into another.

Second, a paragraph (paragraph nine) calling for faculty representatives on administration policy or decision recommending bodies has been deleted from the administrative response.

"We'll start discussing the change in separating the policy and procedure portions of the document Monday, and we have assurances from the administration that they will have an alternative to the (deleted) paragraph for the following Monday," Hall said.

The first change in the document "isn't substantial," Hall said. Most of the concepts remain, and the document has been trimmed from six pages to five.

"I don't feel it is that far removed from the document the senate put forth. There aren't many differences... it's more of a rearrangement."

The question of faculty representatives on administrative bodies remains a sticking point, though.

When the administration faculty committee discussing shared governance brought the document to the senate last November, that issue was the major sticking point.

Changes made in that document by the senate since November haven't much changed the scope or character of the document, said Duane Thompson, provost for academic affairs.

But the administration does have concerns about the issue of faculty representatives.

"The document leaves too much ill-defined, and is too vague to be implemented as the paragraph presently reads," Thompson said last month.

He also noted that the faculty already is represented on the administrative advisory group, and he has invited the faculty to sit in on meetings of the council of academic deans.

While Hall agreed those are probably the two groups the faculty are most interested in, "my perception is that anytime a decision is made concerning the faculty, the faculty want to be in on the ground floor—wherever that takes place," he said last month.

That could cause problems in the summertime, for example, since faculty are paid on a nine-month salary and might not be around if crucial budget decisions need to be made, Thompson said.

"I believe I understand the concern of the faculty as reflected in that (deleted) paragraph," Thompson said.

"If the faculty want to know what is going on, and feel in some instances they've been disregarded and are seeking to prevent that, then that concern needs to be addressed," he said.

"The question is: 'How do we do that effectively?'"

"I'm confident that there are ways to resolve that without disregarding the concerns of the faculty on the issue... Just because there is no formal procedure doesn't mean that we don't communicate."

Baseball season brings out the chewers in the Eastern Eagles

Copenhagen. The secret to success for baseball players, or just a sign of a real man?

"A little pinch is all it takes...Skoal, brother."
--Earl Campbell

By COLIN COWHERD
Staff Writer

From what I've gathered, Earl Campbell isn't a real man.

Even quiche eaters agree. Real men chew Copenhagen. Nobody realizes this fact more than an Eastern Eagle baseball player. They are the quintessential chancellors of chaw. Kings of coffee grounds.

There are 25 varsity baseball players. "Sixteen or 17 chew," according to centerfielder Steve Anderson. Shortstop Jim Wasem lowered the count to "about 10." Nonetheless, they are the real men.

I've never been granted the luxury to enjoy a chew. I attempted it once, I got dizzy, my head spun, I got sick. It was

There are two types of chewers. Simply put, the novice and the expert. The novice is an easy one to spot. The front of his Eagle attire is usually adorned with a mixture of saliva and chew. It's called "the novice dribble."

Likewise, the expert is just as easy to locate. He can easily spit through gale force winds. On occasion, he can even break glass with a single spit.

The chief glass breaker Eastern beholds is second baseman John Bridges.

"He needs at least three chews a day," Wasem pointed out.

It's rumored that chewing improves batting prowess. Brian Snavelly had a tremendous weekend at the plate. He smashed a two-run homer and drove in five runs against the University of Puget Sound. Snavelly chews.

Most of the UPS Loggers also chewed. But according to NAIA rules, chewing regulations are not held accountable in the process of making a real man. For all it's worth, there are those who argue in favor of chewing substitutes.

Some place a role of electric tape in their rear pocket to imitate a can of chew. Others chew sissy stuff like bubble gum and seeds. Many chew Leaf. (i.e. Redman, Beachnut.)

Then there's the look-alike substitutes like Kodiak, Skoal and Happy Days.

Happy Days? Only an expert chewer could of dreamed that up.

Eagles top Cougs

By GREG LEE
Sports Editor

Eastern victories over Washington State University have been few.

Used to be one could count Eagle victories over Chuck "Bobo" Brayton's nine on two hands. At least until this season.

The Eagles, as they say, have had a change of the guard. It has started with their coach—Jim Wasem—a man that doesn't mind taking on a school considered the Goliath of Pacific-10 Conference baseball.

It has trickled down from Wasem and is gradually spreading among his players. It's called confidence.

And the Eagles couldn't have started their 1984 Pac-10 season with a better confidence-insurer Tuesday afternoon as Eastern stopped WSU 5-3 in both teams' conference opener.

It was just victory No. 11 for the Eagles over WSU. The Cougs have notched '78 over Eastern.

Wasem wants to start using more than two hands to acknowledge Eastern victories over Pac-10 opponents.

Several things are important about Eastern's victory over the still-stunned Cougs of Pullman: 1) The Eagles are 1-0 and despite injuries to their top two pitchers (see story this page) have managed to get great outings from the lower half of their hurling staff. Which only means if the Eagles can get the entire staff healthy they'll be a force to reckon with the rest of the season; 2) The confidence factor is needed at this point because the Eagles head west on a six-game road trip, four of which are against Pac-10 opponents.

The Eagles beat the Cougars by simply outthrusting the Palouse team.

Picked as the favorites to win the Pac-10 title, thus expected to

Rugby team upsets Spokane

Compiled from staff accounts

Just like fine wine, Eastern's Rugby Club is getting better with age.

In this sense, with more games.

The Eastern team pulled an upset Saturday, downing the Spokane Club 18-10. "It was an outstanding game," Doug Gresham, one of the team's many outstanding players, said.

"It was an important win for us because we tied them earlier this season (4-4) and we needed to prove that we're good."

And prove they did. The Eastern ruggers controlled the game from the opening scrum in front of a crowd of an estimated 75 onlookers.

The game was originally scheduled to be played on Eastern's Woodward Field, but facilities manager Ron Sperber pulled the rug out from under the rugby team the last minute.

The victory improved the club's record to 3-3-1.

Fresh off their 13-game, nine-day road trip, Eastern's baseball team was ready to kick off their 1984 season at home.

Eastern's first 17 games were on the road - a 17-game test believed to be the toughest pre-season slate Eastern has ever scheduled.

The Eagles came home with an 8-9 record. And EWU coach Jim Wasem was more than pleased with his team's showing in the Southwest swing against perennial National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics power Grand Canyon College, a team that had nearly 40 games worth of swings and putouts to Eastern's then 11.

Grand Canyon took four one-run and one two-run decisions from the Eagles. So far Eastern is 0 for 5 in one-run affairs, 0 for 1 in extra-inning games.

After playing what the NAIA boasts as one of its tougher teams in Grand Canyon, Eastern took on probably the weakest NAIA-affiliated school in the University of Puget Sound last weekend in a pair of twinbills.

Eastern tuned up for the Pacific-10 Conference season, outscoring the Loggers of Puget Sound 43-3 in the four games. The Eagles also outslugged UPS 38-11. That's over one run for every hit - good production in any league.

But the wins over the Laughers, oops, Loggers, must be put in perspective.

By Greg Lee

Eagles ready for Pac-play

The Loggers are a hapless 1-11. Bob Stewart, a Federal Way High School teacher who took the head coaching job at UPS last December with little time to prepare for this year's season, says the Puget Sound administration is de-emphasizing athletics. Which means baseball, a non-scholarship sport at the Tacoma-based university, is living on borrowed time.

Stewart's team is so bad, even he jokes about his squad's ineptness.

When Easterner staff writer Gordon Wittenmyer (he got an A out of Stewart's World History course at Federal Way HS) asked the always safe conversation-starting question, "How are things going so far this year?" Stewart replied, "Lousy. This is the worst team I've ever seen."

Stewart said he knows of at least five high school teams that could beat his Loggers, and a minimum of five high schoolers from Federal Way could start for UPS.

So the factors of Eastern's victories over UPS aren't to be compared with a win over Washington State's Cougars. But Wasem had to be pleased his team didn't play to the level of their opponent (i.e. committing mental mistakes because they weren't in the ballgame) and with the pitching of Dana Cannon, John Harrington and Greg Steiger.

A poll of the Pac-10 coaches by The Spokesman-Review/Spokane Chronicle sports staff revealed an interesting prognosticated order of finish.

It's no surprise Chuck "Bobo" Brayton's Washington State Cougars are predicted to take the Northern Division title, but what was amazing was the predicted finish for Eastern. The coaches slated the Eagles to end up in the bottom half of the division in fifth place.

"Pre-season polls, of course, are not indicative of anything," Eastern's Jim Wasem said, "other than the fact they think three or four of the other teams have had better traditions than we have had."

"That may or may not be true. I don't believe we'll finish fifth."

"We're a pretty good ballclub. We've got good pitching. If we had the Bauer boy (Eric Bauer, a lefthanded pitcher who has a 1-0 record and an 0.82 earned run average in 11 innings of action) healthy right now I'd guarantee you we wouldn't finish fifth."

Also ailing is righthander Mark Nevills, who showed spurts of brilliance in his freshman season last year.

"If those young men could be healthy, Nevills and Bauer, we'll make a run at this thing," Wasem concluded.

Until Eastern receives the services of their injured hurlers, sophomore righthander Jim Olson of Spokane will have to carry most of the duty.

Bauer is suffering from tendonitis in his throwing arm. Wasem said he plans to take the Tigard, Ore., native to Seattle to be examined by the Seattle Mariners' orthopedic surgeon. Although his arm is better, Bauer will not pitch for at least a week, possibly longer.

Eagles cut through Loggers

By GORDON WITTENMYER
Staff Writer

What did the University of Puget Sound baseballers ever do to the Eastern Eagles?

They certainly could never have beaten the Eagles if Loggers of the past resembled in the least this year's Puget Sound bunch. Yet Eastern pounded UPS pitching and stifled Logger lumber en route to routing the NAIA doormats in all four games of the two doubleheaders the clubs played last Saturday and Sunday.

"They were a step out of their league," Eagle coach Jim Wasem said of the Loggers. "I think we showed that in the way we played." Wasem said he was pleased with his team's play "though it wasn't a real great competition situation."

Adding merit to Wasem's understatement were Eagle statistics for the weekend. Eastern batters hit at a .404 clip for the series, led by Brian Snavely's 4-7, .571 plate performance. Steve Anderson and Mike Bettinson each also had four safeties for the pair of twinbills while hitting .500 apiece, and catcher Bill Karwacki added 3-6 production to round out the top percentage Eagles with six or more at bats of the series. The EWU squad also hammered Puget Sound pitches for a .615 slugging percentage. Snavely and shortstop Jim Wasem connected on home runs to lead the Eagle power game.

And the Eastern Express didn't do all of its devouring at the plate. Eagle gloves gobbled up all that reached leather in the series, Eastern guilty of but one throwing error in the four feasts.

Logger pitcher Keith Fugate lost his no-hit bid in the bottom of the second when Karwacki led off the frame with a double into the gap in right-center. Three runs crossed the plate before the inning was over and the Eagles cruised to the 10-0 win, picking up five more runs in the third and two in the fourth.

GAME TWO: Eagle starter Dana Cannon hurled three perfect innings of baseball, and Bob Finn finished up for Cannon facing the minimum number of batters in his two innings of work. Finn gave up a fourth-inning single, but the runner was erased on the ensuing double play.

The game was halted after 4½ innings for the second straight contest because of the ten-run rule, EWU winning 11-0.

GAME THREE: Sunday proved to be the day of the Logger as UPS broke a 15-inning string of goose eggs with a three-run sixth frame in the first game of the afternoon doubleheader.

The game also became the only one of the four played to its natural end, Eastern taking it 12-3.

GAME FOUR: The Loggers appeared to take control of the game early, outhitting the Eagles 1-0 after an inning, but the Eastern offense was too much for UPS as the Eagles took a 4-0 lead by the end of two.

John Harrington tossed the three-hit shutout for the Eagles in picking up the complete game victory.

The 10-0 loss sent Puget Sound home with a 1-11 record, one win better than their play at Eastern might indicate.

Eastern's Roy Merca returns a ball in a match with Pacific Lutheran University last Saturday.

PLU stops Merca, EWU

Compiled from staff accounts

Eastern's men's netters found out the hard way last Saturday that Pacific Lutheran University of Tacoma has more than a good football program to boast about.

The Lutes' tennis team isn't too shabby either, Eastern was taught, as PLU blanked the Eagles 9-0 for its 11th win against no losses.

Eastern men's star Roy Merca, undefeated in five previous outings, lost twice against PLU. He dropped his singles match to Randal Stradling 6-1, 6-1 before Merca and his doubles partner Greg Stapp lost 6-4, 7-5.

On Friday, the men lost to Whitworth in Spokane 7-2.

dethrone Oregon State from its two-year reign, the Cougars came into Cheney on sort of a roll. WSU had fared well in the Riverside Invitational Tournament in the same southern California city. The Cougars had knocked off national NCAA powers San Diego State, Oral Roberts and Cal-State Fullerton before losing to San Diego State in the championship game.

But the Eagles apparently don't read newspapers or watch the sports report on tee-vee. Eastern jumped on the Cougars early, added to their advantage over the middle and late innings, then coasted on the arms of starter Jim Olson and the saving artistry of Dana Cannon, who picked up his fourth save of the season.

Eastern was never behind. Center fielder Steve Anderson, who made two spectacular over his shoulder catches on the run to thwart Cougar rallies, scored the Eagles' first two runs. After reaching base on an error in the first inning, he scored on Bill Karwacki's ground out to second base. In the third inning, he scored on back-to-back Cougar errors.

The ever-improving Brian Snavely got the Eagles on the Board again in the fourth frame. The senior from Redmond pushed his batting average to .452 with two singles, including a run batted in and a stolen base.

And his stolen base typified the Eagles' overall hustle.

After singling in the Eagles' third run and reaching third on an error, Snavely shocked the estimated throng of 300 (and the 30 plus cars and watchers on Heidelberg Hill overlooking left field) by breaking to the plate during the pitchers' windup. Second baseman John Bridges faked a bunt and Snavely slid in safe under the tag of the catcher.

Eastern was ahead 4-1 at that point. The Eagles extended their lead to 5-3 on Steve McDonald's run scoring ground out.

The win improves Eastern's overall record to 13-9. Brayton, who is 12 wins away from 750 as Cougar mentor, watched his team fall to 15-10.

Cougar slugger Jeff Corbally, a high school teammate of Mike Bettinson (Eastern's DH), failed to extend his 20-game hitting streak, a WSU school record.

And the Eagles went fishing Wednesday, their reward from Wasem for such a tremendous effort against the Cougars.

"This is the kind of baseball we have to play," a quite pleased Wasem said. "We're a little bunch of guys that scrap and beat the ball around a little bit and put the pressure on defense. They played our game and played very well."

Heading into their first Pac-10 road extravaganza this weekend, the Eagles take on Washington and Portland State.

"Greystoke" and "Racing" both well-made flicks

By CASSIE ANDREWS
Movie Critic

"Greystoke: the Legend of Tarzan, Lord of the Apes" is by far the best Tarzan movie ever made. Allegedly, this is the first time Edgar Rice Burroughs' story has been filmed the way Burroughs conceived it.

Christopher Lambert plays the adult John Clayton, the Earl of Greystroke, also known as Tarzan, although he is never called that in this movie. Lambert was born in New York, raised in Switzerland, and trained as an actor in France, where he made three movies before he was chosen from a group of 50 for the role of Tarzan.

Andie MacDowell, a former photographic model who has appeared on numerous billboards and magazine covers, plays Jane Porter, the girl that falls in love with Tarzan. Needless to say, her portrayal of Jane far outshines Bo Derek's, and she doesn't once appear nude.

The movie was filmed on location in West Africa in rainforests, and at the largest private home in Scotland, Floors Castle, the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburgh.

Early in the movie, Lord Clayton and his wife, Lady Alice, are involved in a shipwreck that leaves them stranded in Africa. Lady Alice is pregnant, and after she gives birth to a boy, she dies of malaria. The earl is killed by an angry ape, and the baby is adopted by a chimpanzee whose own baby has died.

The boy is raised as an ape, and acts like one, engaging in fights for leadership and playing as the apes do. He only begins to suspect when he is a teenager that he is different from the others, but this is no major concern to him.

He is discovered by captain Phillippe D'Arnot, a Belgian explorer (played by Ian Holm) who has been shot by natives. He is nursed back to health by Tarzan in the traditional ape fashion. He is able, after some time, to communicate with Tarzan, whom he finds out is the son of the missing Earl of Greystoke. He begins to teach him a few words, and eventually takes him to civilization.

Most of the rest of the film takes place in Scotland, where the young earl meets Jane and his grandfather.

The second half of the film seems a bit drawn out and not as well done as the earlier scenes in the jungle. It is still well made, but perhaps too long. The movie's running time is about two hours, and seems like several minutes too long.

The producer and director of "Greystoke" is Hugh Hudson, who gave us the critically acclaimed "Chariots of Fire," which won Best Film Awards from both the British and American Academies, and won Oscars for Best Screenplay, music and costumes.

"Racing with the Moon"

Set in late 1942 and early 1943, "Racing With The Moon" is the story of two young men, their friendship, and their lives during the six weeks before they go into the Marines to fight in World War II.

It is a well-made movie directed by Richard Benjamin, who also directed "My Favorite Year." In both of these movies he recreates an atmosphere of a time gone by. It was the '50s in "My Favorite Year," and the '40s in "Racing." The two movies are also similar in that both are dramas with a good deal of comedy thrown in, but only enough to still be realistic.

Sean Penn ("Taps," "Fast Times at Ridgemont High") stars as Henry. He doesn't really look forward to fighting in the war, especially since he is starting to fall in love with the new girl in town.

Elizabeth McGovern ("Ordinary People," "Ragtime," "Lovesick") plays Caddie, the girl who is living in the town's rich house, because her mother is the maid there. However, because she lives in that house, Henry and his friend Nicky assume that she is rich.

Nicky is played by Nicolas Cage. Cage appeared in last year's movie "Valley Girl," a vastly underrated "Romeo and Juliet" type movie which has finally come to Spokane and Cheney via cable and videocassette.

Nicky is a more or less carefree sort who hates to take anything seriously, but is now being forced to because of the war and the fact that his girlfriend is pregnant and needs an abortion.

The movie explores Nicky and Henry's friendship through these difficult times. They seem to be growing apart at the time when they need each other the most.

"The Last Wave"

The movie on campus this weekend is a 1977 Australian film directed by Peter Weir, who also directed "Gallipoli."

Richard Chamberlain stars in "The Last Wave" as a lawyer defending aborigines that have been accused of ritual tribal murder.

"Mom" helps Eastern students with shuffle

By DORI WILSON
Staff Writer

Over the last six years the steps required to perform the "Showalter Shuffle" during registration have been made easier for many by the motherly face and manner of Marie Osterberg.

Known as "Mom" to many students, Marie spends from six weeks to two months every quarter assisting students with the registration process in the cavernous Room 109 at Showalter Hall.

"I love this job," she said, "because I love working with the students and I also enjoy being able to work a few weeks and then have a few weeks off."

"I'm more fortunate than most people," said Marie, "because I have four very special families in the world." These families include her immediate one, the fellowship found at her church, the Air Force people she has known over the years and the large family she loves at Eastern.

Marie is an active member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and feels that her faith has been a driving force behind the type of person she is.

She has also traveled extensively, accompanying her husband Ray, while he served 22 years in the Air Force. Among her travels, she spent five years in Europe and two years in the Orient. Cheney was chosen as the place to retire because it was close to both of their families.

Ray returned to school after his retirement and obtained two degrees and a masters degree from EWU and is employed on campus at the Computer Center. Marie still has one of her four children at home, Kelly, who is a junior at Cheney High School. "He's so good-looking," said Marie, "and he recently returned from Canada where he performed as part of a song and dance group, 'The Ambassadors,' from Cheney High."

Marie's other children include Kim-Marie, who is married, has four children and lives in Savannah, Georgia, and Mark who lives in Salt Lake City.

Her fourth child, Randy, who would be 25, was killed last month in a tragic accident near his home in Southern California. The man who hit his car and killed him was drunk at the time.

The faith that means so much to Marie has helped her to accept Randy's death. "I feel that the death was meant to be and that we will all be together as a family again someday," she said. "I feel especially sorry for the man who killed Randy because he killed someone he didn't even know and he has to live with that for the rest of his life."

"However, that doesn't mean I condone what has happened. We have become involved in MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) and will do everything we can to help change the laws so things like this won't happen. The man who hit Randy's car had three previous DWI's against him."

When registration started up again this spring quarter, Marie was behind the counter helping the students in her own special way. "I find the spring quarter the saddest," she said, "because lots of the kids that I have helped along are graduating and I know I will miss them."

"Fall is the best quarter because some of them come back and I love to watch the new freshmen when they first come in to register. They are so nervous and scared and then, over the years, I watch them develop self-confidence and I see them blossom. That is exciting for me. Of course, I get closer to some of them than others but I love them all."

Melanie Bell, EWU Registrar, says that Marie is a delightful person. "She is student-oriented and her genuine concern for the students as people comes through in her contact with them," she said.

Marie said her criteria for her job is to be helpful and to "treat the students like I would like to be treated or like I would like my kids to be treated if they went away to college."

Marie thinks highly of the people she works with and says that all of the people involved in the registration process go out of their way to help the students.

Shirley Billings, Marie's supervisor, says Marie is a remarkable woman. "She goes far beyond the call of duty in her concern about the student as a person. We have some very caring people working in 109, but Marie is special," she said.

Lydia Griffith, a junior in nursing said, "She is always super-pleasant and ready to help," and Bruce Thomson, a senior economics major, said, "I prefer to go to her because she seems to know things no one else does."

Marie has two helpful hints for those registering for classes that could ease a lot of frustration. "The first is to sit down and read the first few pages in the Course Announcement Bulletin as soon as it comes out. This has all the important instructions a student needs to know to register. Underline what pertains to you. The second is to read the footnotes regarding the classes wanted," she said.

"I really do love the students, and I support them when I'm not working, too," said Marie. "I go to sporting events and all of the plays, but I love the musicals best," she added.

Marie likes the saying, "A closed mouth gathers no feet" and says that she really believes in living by the Golden Rule. "I suppose you could just say that I love life," she said.

"A Funny Thing" promises laughs

By OPENDACK
Reviewer

In addition to their current season and at the request of the students of the theatre department, Dr. R. Boyd Devin agreed to direct the University Theatre in the production of "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum" - and what a production it is.

While enjoying the show and viewing the simple set, it should be kept in mind that "A Funny Thing" was designed to be a touring show played away from the University Theatre. The set and lights can be erected in 22 minutes and torn down in 12. An application for a tour under auspices of the American Theatre Association and the Department of Defense to military bases overseas has been submitted for this production - and after viewing their full dress rehearsal, there's little doubt here that the application will be approved.

Though much of the liveliness can be accredited to the amusing lyrics and infectious score by Stephen Sondheim, it's the wacky, risible dialogue and zany storyline by Burt Shevelove and Larry Gelbart that clinch this musical/comedy's success.

"A Funny Thing" is the story of Pseudolus, a slave and personal valet to the naive Hero. Pseudolus, more than anything in the world wants his freedom, and is willing to go to any means to acquire it. Hero, more than anything in the world wants Philia, a lovely virgin from the house of ill-repute next door.

Pseudolus, aware of his master's yearning, makes a deal with Hero: if he can match Hero with Philia, Pseudolus will be set free. The ensuing chaos as the slave attempts to gain his freedom provides for the hilarious predicaments and riotous fun that follow.

Pseudolus is superbly played by Rick McKinnon, a senior majoring in theater in Eastern and recently seen in Spokane Civic Theatre's production of "Children of a Lesser God."

Hero is played by Tom Hare. Hare played Jesus in Eastern's 1981 production of "Godspell." Philia, the object of Hero's affection, is played by Hillary J. Devin, that woman with the dynamic voice from "Fantasy on a Winter's Eve."

The non-stop action and cleverly designed, revealing costumes are a feast to the eyes - there is never a dull moment. So much is happening and I was bombarded by so much wonderful talent at once that at times I felt overwhelmed.

It is impossible to single out any one character/actor and proclaim he or she as the best - they are all exceptional. But I must admit to being especially fond of the performance by Fred Holbert as he portrays Hysterium, a frantic senior slave. Holbert appeared in Eastern's "Hamlet" and "Anything Goes" in 1983 and is fantastic. There were times I was laughing so hard I couldn't see through the tears.

Just as good were the Proteans who played everything from bumbling footsoldiers to whimpering eunuchs. Played by David Haugen, Duane Naluai and Patrick M. Stovall, these slick slapstick comedians are a scream.

The steamy courtesans from the house of ill-repute are played by Pam Ferraro, Christine Pilar Salvador, Suzette Carlson and Karla Dippel. My compliments to the costume designer, Susan E. Peacock - the best job in costuming I've seen in a long, long time. Christine, I loved your sandals - where can I get a pair?

The show is fun, entertaining beautifully performed, and expertly directed - thanks Doc. It's a show definitely not to be missed. I stand, I clap till my hands tingle, and I shout "Bravo! Bravo!"

"A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum" opens tonight, Thursday, April 5 and will play every evening at 8 p.m. through April 10 in the PUB Multipurpose Room.

Admission is $4; free for student with ASEWU ID. Call 359-6400 (Cheney) or 458-6400 (Spokane) to confirm the availability of tickets. Festival seating only.

"Murder Among Friends" delights local audiences

By OPENDACK
Reviewer

If you're in the mood for some fine entertainment on the weekends and enjoy a suspenseful mystery with a generous portion of witty comedy - have I got a show for you.

Now showing at Spokane's Civic Theatre is a play that will both startle and delight: "Murder Among Friends," written by Bob Barry and directed by Jodine Watson.

"Murder Among Friends" is a modern thriller/comedy centering around husband and wife, Angela and Palmer Forrester. Played by Bill Hay, he is a famous actor, and his wife, played by Joan McKenzie, plans to have him murdered.

As the play unfolds and the plot thickens the audience finds itself immersed in an intricate web of surprise plot twists, special effects and hilarious dialogue. The set is marvelous - beautifully designed; the costumes, delightful to say the least, and the unconventional use of music - a great idea that works.

"Murder Among Friends" is so well produced that the viewer will be disappointed to see it end. The acting by all is superb, but especially that of Bill Hay and F. Bruce Campbell. I was impressed, satisfied by the professionalism of this production. If you consider yourself an aficionado of good theatre, you owe it to yourself to see this play.

Performances of "Murder Among Friends" will run April 5, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, and 14.

Curtain time is 8 p.m. on all evening performances; 2 p.m. for Sunday matinees. The play is an hour and a half long.

The Spokane Civic Theatre is located across from the Coliseum at N. 1020 Howard Street. The theatre was virtually filled to capacity so reservations are advised. Prices are: Fri./Sat. - $7, Sun./Thu. - $6; Senior/Student - $4.

Council takin' care of business

By SHAUN SULLENS
Staff Writer.

The AS Council officially declared position #9 open at its Tuesday meeting. Dean Haller formerly held that position. However, he graduated and moved to Spokane, leaving the position open for another eligible student. Associated Students is currently accepting applications for the position.

Thayne Stone, AS president, nominated four people for the position of executive assistant. He asked the council to approve Dave Rudy to assist him in organizing the office and to strengthen the Student Union Board of Control. Stone wants Alisa Ford to work on PUB policy and procedures, Carlos Hurtado to work with Stone in international student relations and Jose Cortez's job as an executive assistant has not been determined as yet. The council members accepted Stone's recommendation for all four positions and voted them in.

Executive staff members will have open meetings every Monday at 3 p.m. in the Conference room, executive side.

In other council business, the members voted to give ASEWU dollars to three departments on campus and rejected one request for funds. Steve Zander, Finance V.P., recommended to give money to the band for repairing instruments and purchasing new equipment. The amount was $1,850. Foreman requested $416 to send Jo Morlan to national competition in forensics at Kansas State University, and the rifle team asked for $439 to send their coach to a conference in San Francisco where several other universities will meet to discuss how to save money on competition travel expenses in the future. The council was in favor of these three budget requests. However, they denied M.E.N.C.'s request for $250 for reimbursement for attending a conference in the past. The reason for denial was because, Zander said, "the organization showed no interest in pursuing the funds."

An area that the council has been concerned with is the relationship between the city of Cheney and the students. Bill Muir, vice president, proposed to do something about the relationship by inviting the president of the Chamber of Commerce, Judy White, to be a guest speaker at a council meeting in the future.

Also the council was urged by Muir to attend a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on April 18 to ask for suggestions of how to have better relations between the city and the students. "Everyone's input will be welcome," Muir added.

NORMAL SCHOOL OR BUSINESS COLLEGE?

Should high school graduates take a business course or spend a year or two in a Normal School and make teaching their profession?

Normal School education gives breadth and culture—is general education—while business college education is apprenticeship work almost wholly. Normal School education lasts all one's life, and is of lasting benefit; business college education must be practiced, or it is soon forgotten, and is not of help all through life.

The Normal School course lasts one or two years—while the business course is somewhat shorter. The Normal School course, however, leads at once to a wage of $60 to $80 per month—except in rare instances.

Teaching gives a better social standing than does business, throws young people into contact with the best rural or village or city homes—where living expenses are much lower than in the city where business throws the young man or woman into contact with all classes, and where living expenses are high.

In hard times the teacher's wage does not suffer, and the demand for teachers is not diminished. In hard times in business, wages are cut, and many, many people are thrown out of employment. Tuition is high in business colleges, is free in Normal School.
