The game was a fast breakout from the start. Idaho scored 39 to 29. Adams made the first basket, but the Normal boys had broken away early and piled up a lead which never threatened Caucasian. Bowes played good ball for the Fighting Savages, especially in the second half, but was limited to a total of ten points. Burns was high in scoring for the Normal, with 16. He was the only one of the Normal team that finished the contest in the limelight. The Normal team from Cheney took the game from the College of Idaho team on Monday, January 5, by a score of 21 to 16.

The Normal team was made up of the following players: Adams, Burns, M. J., Burns, M. L., Cowan, Ed., Cowan, Elmer, Donk, Fred, Galbraith, Mentor, Mitchell, R. P., Miller, R. D., Simon, L., Taylor, W. C., and Wade, T. W.

Assembly attendance again

LESS than half the student body was present at the election of officers last Tuesday. Why was there this let-up in the interest shown in assemblies? During the fall quarter very few votes were cast; now that attendance, let's drop our interest at this time. Student assemblies are never boring. Come out and support our new officers.

LOYALTY

AT THE first basketball game of the season four girls made themselves the object of much ridicule and criticism by refusing to stand while the band was playing the school song, "The Red and White." It is one of the few traditions of the Normal required everyone to show enough respect for the school to stand during the singing of our school song. Girls, however, are more kindly treated for the first offense lead to constant disregard. As the result of their failure to provide adequate schools in thousands of communities, often at a sacrifice of their physical and economic return offered to the teaching profession.

The typical American teacher is inexperienced. In many cases he is teaching his first school. His training is almost an even chance that he has had two or three years' experience. Teachers, even after they have had their professional training, almost no national teaching, seldom reach a high degree of proficiency in the classroom until they have had several years of experience. At least six or seven years of teaching experience are essential to the development of the highest skill. Teachers must be chosen from a proper background. The social and family background of many teachers is such that they are not prepared for the best American public service. They are brought up in the love of this country, the nation which we are the children under their care. In some states a high percentage of normal school students come from homes which are both American in the best American, the nation's life, the children and the nation itself suffer. Any steps toward the betterment of the quality of the teachers, the teaching profession must be based upon these facts.

MONEY must be provided for better teachers. If America is to have a better teaching profession it must pay for it. In these days, what gets paid for, whether he is buying shoes, a new dress, a new service. Americans as good teachers as it is willing to demand and to pay for.

If America's classrooms are to be filled with capable and well-trained people whose cultural and physical background presents the best in American life, the economic return offered to the teaching profession must be such as to justify the expense involved.

It is useless to expect young people, coming from families and parents of limited capacity, to undergo a period of expensive training in order to enter a service whose rewards are proportionate to the strength to allow them the maximum essential to a life of culture. Young people have to many opportunities to perform valuable service to the community, at a fair return, to expect them to be willing to enter teaching for a period of time.

The salaries paid teachers are the greatest single factor in determining the character of the teaching profession.

The teaching profession must be made a desirable career for a life work—As teaching is looked upon as the highest form of public service, when teachers are given the proper place in financial and social rewards, when the teacher is recognized as one of the most constructive forces in the American life, and when the primary, the highest type of profession, our young people will not be upon teaching as a lifetime work, and the quality of our teaching personnel will be raised to a high level.

The public school system must have a modern curriculum. The curriculum must undergo constant modification to keep pace with an ever-changing, ever advancing life. News in arts and science, ways of living, new truths about life in general are every day coming to our knowledge. It is the function of the education of the average normal student as it is for those trained to be normal. Well can it be that people be taught to do something differently if they cannot afford it? Our teachers, our students, our schools have to face the future as it is and turn to the modern curriculum. The curriculum must be changed, or our students will fall behind in their studies.

In order to arrive at a satisfactory program, the teaching profession must receive some training in the school board in the slack period of the school year. The teachers are the key to the organization, the administration, the teaching, and the students. The teachers are the masters of the school, the teachers are the lifeblood of the school. The teachers are the masters of the school, the teachers are the lifeblood of the school. The teachers are the masters of the school, the teachers are the lifeblood of the school.

We Think Maybe—

Most are bright enough to see that they are not getting the full value of the average normal student is as for those trained to be normal. Well can it be that people be taught to do something differently if they cannot afford it? Our teachers, our students, our schools have to face the future as it is and turn to the modern curriculum. The curriculum must be changed, or our students will fall behind in their studies.

The typical American teacher is untrained. Considerably more than half of our teachers have less training than the equivalent of high school foundation and two years of professional training in normal school. It is doubtful that even half are born high school graduates and that the training of thousands is limited to that given in the common school, plus a period of a few weeks' coaching, followed by an examination. The examination is oftentimes a farce.

Dear Ma,

I have just come back at school and everything is the same as it was when I left you. I have not as much work as I thought when I came back. Here at school we don't do much work all the time. Jimmy Skinner gets a lot of work. Well, I always thought that he was joshin' me when he said it. I don't know how I'm going to get any of the work. They call it a boarding house, but I ain't seen it yet but it sure is a dandy.

Say ma, you don't say you are going to get so home, are you going to get so home? When he took his girl to the last funeral you had. I want to see too many and the next day I said to him if I was there, says shore didn't see you and I couldn't do no use for the opratorium, well I laffed' cause I thought but I didn't no what he meant by you.

Me yo no my marks on my grade slips wuz all d's and f's. One of my teachers and said all get or he be cause she was the Mejester to the average normal student is as for those trained to be normal. Well can it be that people be taught to do something differently if they cannot afford it? Our teachers, our students, our schools have to face the future as it is and turn to the modern curriculum. Dayton. Living rooms and kitchen were for the holiday season.

The holiday season was coming to an end. Regular visitors returned Monday morning at the hospital.

'Dayton,' he said, standing on the sidewalk. 'Tis the season of giving, isn't it?'

The door opened, and the woman inside said, 'Have a seat, dear. I've been waiting for you.'

Mr. Dayton nodded, sitting down on the bench. 'I've been waiting for this moment, too.'

The woman smiled, handing him a package. 'I thought you might like this.'

Mr. Dayton took the package, looking at it with curiosity. 'What is it?'

The woman laughed. 'It's a toy for your children.'

Mr. Dayton thanked her, and the woman left. He stood up, looking at the package with a mixture of excitement and anticipation.

He went home,拆开包裹，取出里面的礼物。这是给孩子们的圣诞礼物，他感到非常开心。他决定在圣诞节那天给孩子们一个惊喜，让这个节日充满欢乐。
